The Daily Quote

"It's up to Speaker John Boehner (R-Ohio). Republican and Democratic advocates see one final, long-shot chance to pass immigration reform this summer, and its fate rests with a Speaker stuck between his party's resistance and his search for a career-defining legacy... Boehner clearly wants to overhaul the immigration system, but to revive the issue, he will have to untangle knots he tied during the past year. First, he ruled out the Senate's 'comprehensive' bill and said no House bill would get a vote absent support from a majority of Republicans. Then he announced that instead of a single, wide-ranging bill, the House would take a 'step-by-step' approach, with reform embodied in several separate bills that could not be reconciled with the Senate proposal... Boehner has sent mixed signals that have confused supporters and foes about his intentions. He reportedly told a group of donors he was 'hell-bent' on passing a law this year, mocked Republicans for their resistance, and then assured his House colleagues there is no 'secret conspiracy' to ram an overhaul through."
